Mr. Frank Heemskerk, Executive Director of the World Bank Group, made a two-day visit to the Republic of Croatia to see the economic progress the country has made. Mr. Heemskerk participated in the launch workshop for the Social Protection System Modernization Project, jointly organized by the Ministry of Social Policy and Youth and the World Bank. There he heard first-hand which reforms the authorities will undertake to improve the social protection of the most vulnerable groups in Croatia, while making the system itself more efficient and less costly. At the workshop, Mr. Heemskerk discussed with Ms. Milanka Opacic, Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Social Policy and Youth, and Mr. Siniša Varga, Minister of Health, the importance of this reform program to better target the most vulnerable in a financially sustainable way. Discussions focused on the most pressing challenges Croatia is facing in speeding up economic recovery, while at the same time maximizing the benefits of European Union membership and improving the business environment. During the visit Mr. Frank Heemskerk, Executive Director of the World Bank Group, stated that, "The Croatian economy and its people are facing some serious challenges after years of recession. I am encouraged, however, to see how the Croatian government and the private sector are partnering with the World Bank Group to boost economic recovery. Unfortunately there are no quick fixes. But the collaboration, in which Croatia draws from the global expertise and financing opportunities offered by the World Bank Group help to make the Croatian economy more efficient and competitive, while safeguarding the most vulnerable people in the country." Prior to taking on the position as Executive Director of the World Bank, Mr. Heemskerk worked in both private and public sectors.
