HHL - Leipzig Graduate School of Management among the top 35 business schools worldwide

HHL - Leipzig Graduate School of Management, the very first free-standing business school in the world, has successfully maintained its position among the top MBA programs worldwide. In its most prestigious ranking in Latin America, the business magazine AméricaEconomía puts HHL in 33rd position. The prominent names at the top of the table include Harvard Business School and the London Business School.

Ever since it was refounded in 1992, HHL has consistently advanced up the league of top European business schools and successfully aligned itself within the competition for the world's best students. Says Prof. Dr. Andreas Pinkwart, Dean of HHL - Leipzig Graduate School of Management: "We are delighted about the affirmation that HHL can keep up also with its international competitors in management education. HHL has good chances to move up from the German into the European top group of business schools. This is our goal for the next years. The ranking result pays tribute to the excellent training future business leaders receive at HHL.?"

AméricaEconomía began publishing rankings of MBA programs in Latin America in 1995. In response to growing interest among students and companies in studying in Europe and the USA, the ranking's league tables were broadened to include also business schools of these regions. Its assessment criteria include the average GMAT score, the percentage of foreign students, and graduates' starting salary.
