Last Take for Personal Film Portraits of HHL Students

Recently, the last take was shot in the production of a new film series for HHL Leipzig Graduate School of Management. The students and alumni Maria Neschetna, Tim Mosig and Koon-Kiu Man allowed a camera team to take a glimpse into their private lives. They explain how they got into competitive swimming, drawing or the passion of guiding and how this counterbalance helps them to tackle their studies and everyday student life at Germany's first business school. HHL's Marketing Director Jana Vogel comments on the series, "We would like to paint a very personal portrait of our students with these films. Even though they all study the same subject, they are very different personalities with varied cultural and personal backgrounds and interests, all represented in one class. And this is exactly what makes for the special spirit at HHL."

"The HHL community lives off of its diversity"

Tim Mosig, graduate of the Master in Management Program (M.Sc.) and currently a doctoral candidate at HHL's Center for Leading Innovation and Cooperation (CLIC) adds, "The HHL community lives off of its diversity, which is also represented by the students' off-campus activities. It is possible to have hobbies in addition to completing a demanding program at HHL. "I was very happy about the opportunity to present my work as a tour guide for Leipzig and the surrounding area, which I have been doing for ten years now since finishing a course at the Leipzig Chamber of Commerce and Industry, as part of HHL's new film series."

To inspire as many students as possible, HHL will show the film series not only on its website but also on various online portals and education fairs. More exciting portraits will follow this fall. <http://www.hhl.de/blog/de/we-are-hhl/>
